

Curriculum-Based Measurement: Effective Universal Screening and Progress Monitoring Measures for Response-to-Intervention Models

Presented by Suzanne Graney

Friday, March 5, 2010 – 8:30am-3:30pm

The Benilde Library, St. John's University Oakdale Campus, 500 Montauk Hwy, Oakdale, NY 11769

Sponsored by LIRSSC, ESBOCES and St. John's University

This workshop will provide an overview of considerations for selecting validated, effective assessment tools for Response-to-Intervention implementation with an emphasis on Curriculum-Based Measurement (CBM). Research-validated CBM tools will be introduced in the areas of early literacy and reading, spelling and written expression. Discussion of the utility of these measures will include developmental considerations from prekindergarten through high school. Practical examples will be given of CBM's use for evaluating Tier 1 and Tier 2 programs, screening for students needing additional support, and individual goal setting and progress monitoring strategies at Tiers 2 and beyond. Participants will gain understanding of the essential features of effective Rtl assessment tools as well as specific information about CBM and how it may be used to enhance the academic achievement of all students.

Suzanne Bamonto Graney, Ph.D., is an associate professor of school psychology at Rochester Institute of Technology. She earned her doctorate at the University of Oregon, where she received specific training in Curriculum-Based Measurement. Her vita includes five years of school-based experience in Florida, where she was actively engaged in assisting her district and others across the state in using CBM to make effective instructional decisions. She is the second author of the recently released book, "Rtl in Practice: A Practical Guide to Implementing Effective Evidence-Based Interventions in Your School."
